Symptoms

Lead is a strong poison found almost anywhere. It is in air, water, food, dust, and soil , and can be inhaled or ingested.

Symptoms of Lead Poisoning

- Tired or cranky
- Constipation
- Clumsy or weak
- Not much of an appetite
- Headache
- Not able to sleep
- Not able to pay attention
- Vomiting

 Most children have no symptoms of lead poisoning

Lead Poisoning Can Cause

- Learning Disabilities
- Seizures
- Behavioral Problems
- Coma and Death
- Hearing and Speech Problems
- Developmental Delays
- Kidney and Digestive Disorders

 Pregnant women with lead poisoning are at risk for miscarriage.

The only way to know for sure if your child has an elevated blood lead level is to have a blood test. ALL children, ages 6 months to 6 years, should be assessed at least once a year to determine their risk of lead poisoning. Ask your Doctor. If your child has lead poisoning, you and the child's doctor are responsible for establishing regular scheduled follow-up blood tests until the child has reached a safe blood lead level.

For information on Lead Poisoning, contact the San Antonio Metropolitan Health District Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention Program at (210) 207-8853 or en Español at (210) 207-6042.
